READ MORE

As already anticipated in this report, CRG brought two chassis versions to Le Mans for the FIA World Championship KZ: the proven Road Rebel with 32 tubes updated from a technical point of view (already in version 2023) and the KT2 chassis with 30mm tubes

All drivers had both models at their disposal and the choice of the chassis used in the race was made by the individuals mainly based on the driving feel or sensations, as the performance of both models was equivalent in all track conditions throughout the weekend.
CRG also from a commercial point of view for the year 2023 will offer, through its sales network, both models for the shifter market segment, focusing on the fact that in the face of equivalent performance, the driver will be able to make a choice based on his or her driving style.

Going back to the World Championship in France, the Road Rebel 32mm chassis won the FIA World Championship with Arthur Carbonnel and took 3rd place in KZ with Jeremy Iglesias, while the KT2 30mm chassis won the KZ World Championship with Viktor Gustafssonn and was used by several drivers in KZ2. From a technical point of view, of course, the two chassis models have different characteristics and strengths, but that at the level of performance and overall behavior on the track have proven comparable. While the Road Rebel chassis has a higher base grip and as a strong point braking and traction, the 30mm chassis showed on all types of circuits a great quickness in changes of direction, offering a cornering speed equivalent to the 32mm chassis. The KT2 chassis, according to what drivers report, is lighter to drive, and this factor is an example of how, for some, this feature can be positive, while others may like it less. Regarding the technical issue, having different geometries and tubes, the two frame models require slightly different basic set ups, but both are relatively easy to handle requiring over the course of an event limited adjustments. For more information on CRG's range of chassis for KZ classes, it is advisable to contact an authorized dealer.
(complete list at www.kartcrg.com)